NJ Execution of black students by illegal alien gangs causing uproar!

ALIPAC NOTE: This case involving the execution style murders of four black college kids in New Jersey sounds a lot like the reports from Los Angeles where the illegal alien gangs have set up ethnic cleansing zones and murder blacks on sight for being in the zones. If NJ cracked down on illegal immigration like other states, these kind of crimes could be prevented.

Immigration politics swirling about killings in Newark schoolyard

As police continued to search for additional suspects in the execution-style killings of three young people in Newark, the debate over the immigration status of one of those already arrested picked up political steam.

A city councilman announced Monday that he was introducing a bill to require Newark police to contact federal immigration authorities whenever they arrest someone living in the country illegally who is charged with committing a felony.

The bill is the first piece of legislation that has resulted from the horrifying shooting of four Newark college students, which left three dead and one wounded.

One suspect, 28-year-old Jose Carranza, was an illegal immigrant from Peru who was granted bail earlier this year when he was charged with assault and child rape. On Monday, a judge revoked his $200,000 bail at the request of prosecutors. Carranza's attorney did not object.

Carranza attended the 5-minute hearing but did not speak. His listened to the discussions, which were translated, through headphones.

"He clearly should not have been out on the street," said City Councilman Ron C. Rice, who is sponsoring the new immigration measure in City Hall.

The guidelines Rice is calling for would change policy for law enforcement in the city.

Paul Loriquet, a spokesman for the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, told The Star-Ledger of Newark that the office generally refers cases of illegal aliens to federal immigration authorities only after the defendant is convicted and sentenced. Notifying authorities earlier might result in having suspects deported before they could be punished for their crimes.

The shootings have ratcheted up anger in New Jersey's largest city. The overall crime rate has declined, but the number of killings to date, 60, is nearly even with last year's pace of 63. The killings have prompted billboards in the downtown area that scream, "HELP WANTED: Stop the Killings in Newark Now!"

The four victims, friends ages 18 to 20, were shot Aug. 4 while visiting in a school yard not far from their homes Saturday night. The three who died were forced to kneel against a wall and shot at close range. Authorities have said robbery appeared to be the motive.

So far, authorities have arrested three people in the case _ Carranza and two juveniles _ and secured a warrant for a fourth, Rodolfo Godinez, 24. Authorities say they are looking for additional suspects, but not have named any of them publicly.

Police spokesman Todd McClendon would not comment Monday on a report in The Star-Ledger of Newark in Monday's newspapers that two of the remaining suspects are juveniles.
